PROJECTS

What's For Dinner? | github.com/jdesgarennes/whatsForDinner|
jdesgarennes.github.io/whatsForDinner/index.html

- This website solves the problem that faces us all and that is getting ideas on what to make for dinner using what is already in your fridge to lessen the time at the grocery store during an already busy week. In addition to the recipe search you will notice a bit of humor where we included a food related joke at the end of every search.

- This site allows you to input the ingredients that you have in your fridge and search for recipes based on those ingredients listed. It will show you 5 results with pictures, the title of the recipe, a Weight Watcher score, as well as the cook time. When you choose a recipe that speaks to you, just click on the card and it will take you directly to the site in which the recipe instructions can be found. One of the roles I was responsible for was the appearance of the website and together my team collaborated on how to execute the functionality for the website using Javascript.

- Tools/ languages used: JavaScript, 2 server-side APIs(Spoonacular and Chuck Norris.io), CSS, UIKit(CSS Framework), and Html

Weather Dashboard | github.com/Krcano/Weather-Dashboard | krcano.github.io/Weather-Dashboard/

- The weather dashboard allows you to view the current weather, uv index that changes the color based on, an icon representing the weather conditions, humidity, and wind speed all in one container. Below the user will find the five day forecast for the city of the user's choice.

- This app allows the user to view the weather for the city they enter and stores their previous searches so that they can go back to it later and research it when they click the name of the city.

- Tools/ languages used: JavaScript, Third Party API, Css, HTML

JavaScript Code Quiz | github.com/Krcano/Code-quiz | krcano.github.io/Code-quiz/

- This timed multiple choice code quiz allows the user to test their knowledge of basic javascript and counts their score of correct answers at the end.

- The quiz gives you 1 minute to score as high as you can and with each incorrect answer it deducts 10 seconds from your time. It also takes note of how many correct answers you get and uses local storage to save your name and score for the high score board.

- Tools/ languages used: JavaScrip, CSS, Html
